

Logic Branch	IF (Condition / Trigger)	THEN (Action / Next Step)	Additional Context / Notes
Framing & Meeting Control	IF you need to secure your credibility, seize control of the meeting, and share power immediately...	THEN use the "Framing" technique by stating, "I want to run a concept past you and get your feedback".	This secures a psychological loop and allows you to "withdraw the concept and save face" if it doesn't suit the client.
Introducing Concepts / Overcoming Resistance	IF you need to explain a concept and want to prevent the client from slipping into immediate judgment...	THEN lead with a "3rd Person Story" (e.g., using "Bill & Mary's chocolate shop") before exploring client relevance.	Disassociating the concept from their business initially keeps the emotional connection (amygdala & hippocampus) active rather than triggering pure logic.
Credibility & Disturbance	IF you need to stimulate left and right brain thinking to highlight an "inevitable change" (e.g., Old World vs. New World)...	THEN deploy a "Contrast Model" framework.	This builds credibility through believable information in the first column, ensuring the "disturbance" doesn't feel overly confronting.
Aspiration & Motivation	IF you need to drive the client's desire and aspiration to "reach the top"...	THEN utilize an "Ascension Model" framework.	The graphic form and content should be placed in an ascending order to visually reinforce the climb.

Highlighting Complexity	IF you need to illustrate your knowledge of the "drivers" behind an issue or provide decision-tree options...	THEN use a "Matrix Model".	These provide a great metaphoric backdrop, particularly when you use irregular titles for categories (like "Dog" or "Problem Child").
Explaining the "How-To"	IF you are in the delivery stage and need to show a sequence and milestones with a logical start and end...	THEN use "Flow-Charts".	Be careful not to use Flow-Charts too early during the "Why" or "What" stages, or you risk giving away your best information for free.
Preempting Objections / Empathy	IF you want to cover a familiar problem to build common ground and "call out the ghosts" (preempt objections)...	THEN use a "Common Problem Story" utilizing the Event, Cause, Effect reveal structure.	This reduces the client's feeling of being "channeled" into an outcome, thereby increasing their trust and confidence in you.
