

Business Dating

What happens when attraction turns sour..?

WHY

Do we change our thinking & behaviour (so much) from personal relations vs business relations?

Explaining the 'Dating Scene'...

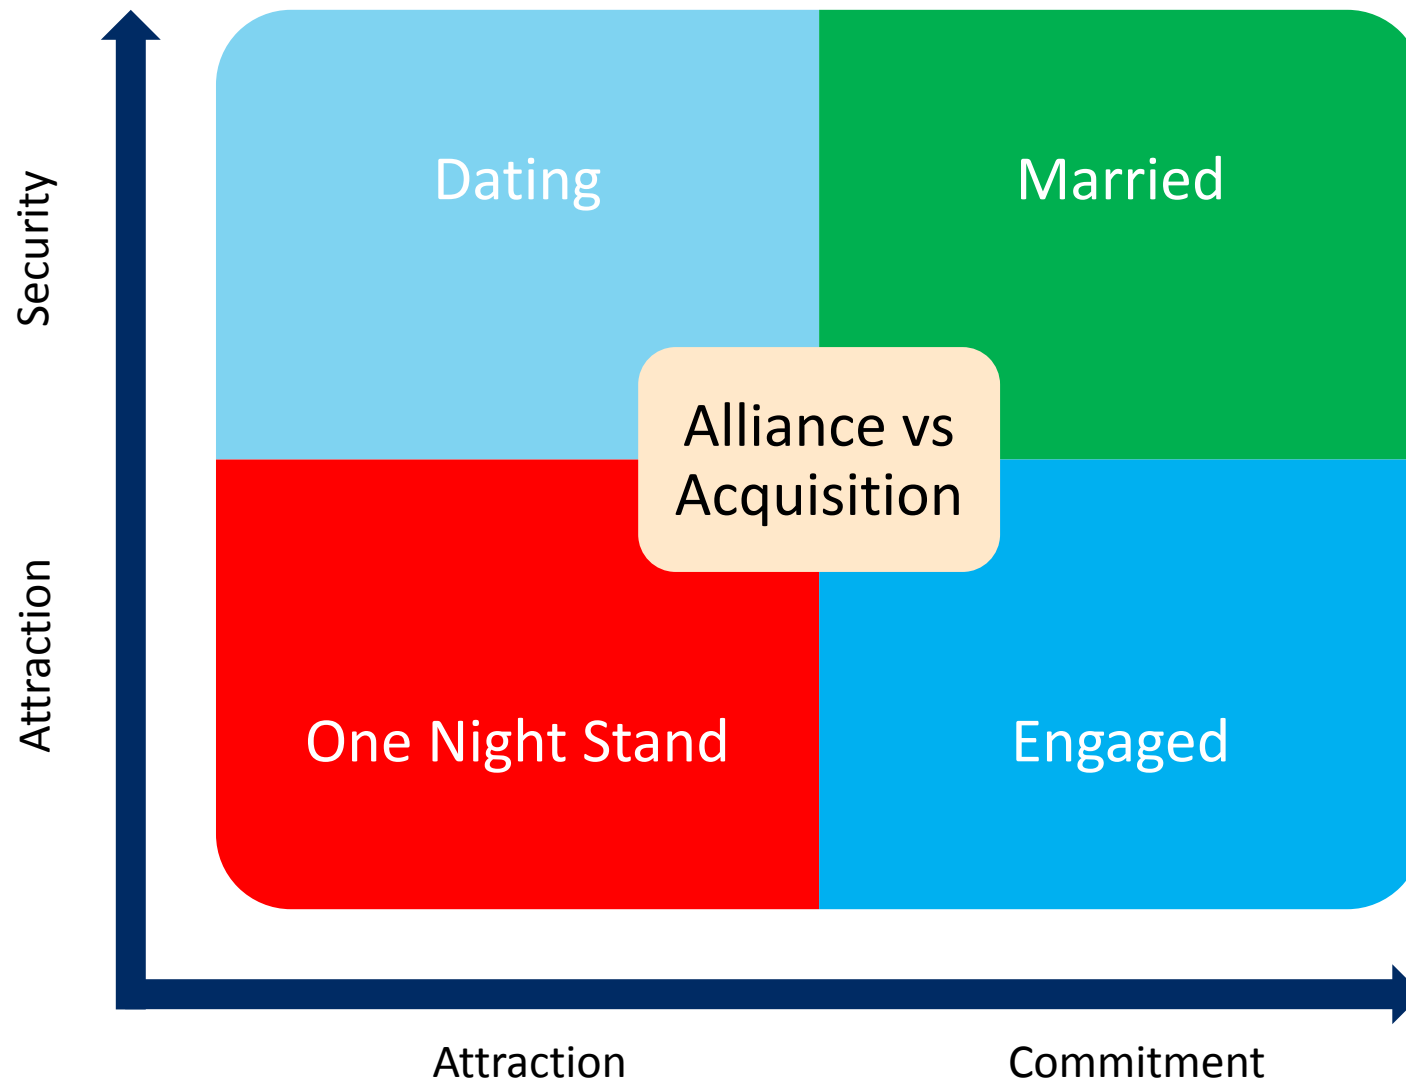

1. One night stand – Two parties come together to 'meet their needs' on a singular occasion, get the job (project/contract) done and then move on. May never be repeated.
2. Dating – More commitment made between two parties, more effort made to understand each other's requirements and serve a working partnership which can last for many years. Security is increased as time together develops.
3. Engaged – Both parties are now fully aware of the commitment that lies ahead and enjoy time to prepare themselves mentally, physically and financially for their amalgamation. Those around them also get a chance to 'test' the relationship.
4. Marriage – Two parties become one, fully committed and ready to work together to meet each other's needs "for better or for worse".

Few would contemplate getting married on the first date yet somehow, it's deemed appropriate for two business entities to become one overnight and then spend the next few years trying to mold cultures together under strained circumstance.

In the case of two-family business entities, why not try dating first?

(Purchase valuations completed at outset with a 12mth right of fulfillment allowing for withdraw)

Explaining the 'Dating Scene'...

Notes

1. Add your thoughts here...